SAGE Group CEO to lead the Control System Integrators Association

Global trade body the Control System Integrators Association has appointed Sage Group Managing Director and CEO Adrian Fahey as its Chair, following his role on the board for the past four years.

He replaces Luigi de Bernardini of Autoware in Italy.

Fahey has held senior roles with the South Australian-based industrial automation and digitalisation company for more than 22 years. Fahey also sits on number of boards, including the National Association of Women in Operations and Nukon, a SAGE Group subsidiary with a focus on data.

He said he was “honoured” to be able to “give back to the association”, which represents more than 500 members across 35 countries.

“The mission of the CSIA is to advance the industry of control system integration and we certainly understand first-hand the value that the association offers its members,” he said.

“The CSIA gave our business access to foundational systems and processes as we grew and a global best practice platform to benchmark against.”
